SYNOPSIS.

Burton H. Barnes, a wealthy American fettring Corsica, resches the young Eng-ilsh heatenant, Edward Gerard Anstruffs and his Corsican bride, Marina, daughter of the Paolis, from the mar-derous yendelta, understanding that his the purpose of securing the They try to murder the American.

Their carriage soon stops near the two small bays upon which are situated the bathhouses. At a little landing place Barnes can just discern in the mist of the water, which adds to the gloom of the evening, a boat with two seamen.

To be certain, he hails and is answered by Emory's voice.

"It's all right," he whispers to the ladies and springs out of the carriage. The next moment Emory has run up from the landing and is standing beside him. Emory whispers suspicious-First Doctor-We are afraid that iy to Barnes; "You get the ladies into the boat quick. I told my men not to come near you unless there was danger. I hear their steps coming down. I'll see what they want," Barnes and Edwin carefully escort their charge through the gloom down the little steps that lead to the boat. Their hand satchels being placed beside them, a carriage robe is earefully tucked by Barnes about Miss Austruther. Performing a like service for his wife, Edwin seizes the tiller, seats himself at the stern and remarks comfortably: "Now all's shipshape! As soon as your sleuth is on board we'll pull out to the yacht." Then he asks one of the two oarsmen: "Have you the Seagull's bearings?"

"Aye, aye, sir. She is lying off about a quarter of a mile nigh due south of

"All right," says Edwin, examining a pocket compass he produces. "She might have been difficult to find in the darkness without her bearings. Shes a light up, of course?" "A mast head anchor-glim, sir," replies the man. Suddenly Edwin whispers to Barnes: "We've boarders!" and springing up, seizes a boathook and pushes the cutter away from the dock, "Pull quick, my men!" he commands, for the voice of the American detective rings out in the night air: "Look out for yourselves!" and they hear the patter of feet in the darkness running down the walk mingled with a couple of foreign
